To Whom It May Concern:

As the Head of Learning and Instruction K-12 for English Modern Schools, I have had the pleasure of interacting with Amber Clark on numerous occasions over the past two academic years, and I am consistently impressed by her teaching, rapport with faculty, classroom organization, management skills, and ability to build strong relationships with parents.

Amber will be coming to you with the qualities of a natural leader: genuineness, intelligence, and integrity. Just as importantly, she will come with an enthusiasm for learning, as well as a resolute desire to understand new theories and ideas. She has an immense interest in research, curriculum development, and parent involvement. It is very exciting to think of the ways in which she might contribute to your school.

Amber really has the potential to touch the lives of many children. Her readiness to take suggestions, modify lessons, and experiment with new strategies demonstrates her motivation and reflection about teaching and learning. She often experiments with several strategies to find the best way to manage her classroom and keep student's on-task with projects that are both interesting and challenging.

While Amber's teaching ability seems to come naturally, I also credit her determination and diligence in completing the many tasks when working with students who are English Language Learners. I can't tell you how many times I swung by her classroom and saw her getting materials prepared for her scholars or working on a differentiated activity for her lower functioning students. One of the things I noted over the past year and a half is that she does a great job of recognizing when a student needs special assistance or additional academic intervention. Amber is willing to give 110% every single day in pursuit of achieving success with each student she teaches.

I have absolutely no doubt that she will master any challenges going forward with the same sparkle and efficiency as she has shown in the past. Even when the workload seems overwhelming, she maintains her good cheer, and copes with a combination of humor and persistence. She can negotiate and manage complex interdisciplinary environments, relate to people at all levels of hierarchy and in different divisions and departments. I feel comfortable with her judgment and confident in her skills.

I expect her to continue excelling in any school which she is placed. I sincerely and enthusiastically recommend Amber without any reservation and truly believe you will not find a better candidate. If you should require additional information regarding this candidate, please feel free to contact me at Selina.Peay@emsdoha.net or (974) 5514-2515.

Thank you,
